Digital Collections

DOC is an online catalog, like a digital version of a card catalog, and contains no images. If you are looking for images of maps from our collections visit NC Maps, a joint project between the State Archives of North Carolina, Outer Banks History Center, and the North Carolina Collection at UNC-Chapel Hill. Some maps related to World War I or World War II can be found in their digital collections within the North Carolina Digital Collections.

Browsing the Map Collection

If you don't know the name or call number of the map you're looking for, try browsing the catalog.

1. Go to <https://archives.ncdcr.gov/doc/search-doc>
2. On the left hand side of the screen are sorting and browsing options we call facets. Scroll past the Repository options to Collections. Click on "More..." to open other collection options.
3. Scroll down and click on the Map Collection link.
4. DOC will give you a list of materials identified as part of the Map Collection (see below). You can browse this list to find items of interest.

Scope and Content
The State Archives of North Carolina's Map Collection consists of manuscript maps, reproduced maps, blueprints, lithographs, engravings, blue line prints, tracings, soil surveys, geological surveys, culture maps, road maps, railroad maps, etc. These maps are quite diverse in size, condition, and quality, both in terms of the work involved in the map's creation and in the medium it is on. When preparing the Map Collection for online access, some re-cataloging has been necessary to bring order to the collection and to make it more accessible. First, the archival materials of evidential value to their integrity, that had been removed from their original collection and placed in the Map Collection, have been separated when possible and treated as separate units. Secondly, material in the Map Collection such as building plans and elevations of buildings and forts have been removed from the Map Collection and added to the collection of building plans and ...
