Abstract

The North Carolina Council of Defense Records is composed of the original correspondence, subject files, financial records, organizational records, and operational materials created and utilized by the North Carolina Council of Defense from its formation on May 31, 1917, through the completion of an unpublished history of the Council by one of its members in 1932. The materials document the operations and war-time resources management of North Carolina, as well as of the county Councils of Defense in North Carolina. Correspondence from citizens and county officials regarding various war-time issues are represented in the collection. The collection also contains information, records, posters, and reports from other states' Councils of Defense; and training, promotional, and public awareness materials from the Council of National Defense. Overall, the collection documents the status of North Carolina's resources, government, and citizens throughout World War I. The records in this collection were accumulated from 1917 to 1933 by members of the state and county Councils of Defense, and deposited with the North Carolina Historical Commission by 1933.

Acquisition

This collection was acquired in multiple parts by the North Carolina Historical Commission from 1918 to 1932. The bulk of the collection was acquired between 1918 and 1921 by Daniel Harvey Hill Jr., a member and Secretary from 1921-1924 of the North Carolina Historical Commission, and Robert B. House, the North Carolina Historical Commission's Collector of World War Records, since June 19, 1919. Hill also served as the chairman of the North Carolina Council of Defense's Historical Committee, which cooperated with the Historical Commission to collect and document the state's war-time history. All of the materials in this collection were acquired or collected as part of the North Carolina Historical Commission's on-going World War historic materials collection project, which was authorized by Sections 3 and 4 of Chapter 144 of the North Carolina Public Laws and Resolutions in 1919.

Most of the collection was acquired by the end of 1920, as listed in the 1918-1920 North Carolina Historical Commission Biennial Report. Elements of the collection—in keeping with the statutes of the 1919 law—were received after the end of North Carolina's involvement in war-time activities in 1920, as organizations and counties finally had time to compile their war records to send to the Historical Commission.

The Joseph Hyde Pratt Papers (Subseries IF) was received from Joseph Hyde Pratt, a member of the North Carolina Council of Defense, in three separate donations, which were reported in the Biennial Reports published in 1920, 1930, and 1932.

Separated Material

Oversized items that did not fit in large archival boxes were relocated to the Military Collection Oversized Map Case in the Archives Stacks 3B, and are stored in WWI 1 Oversized Folders 1-3 (see Collection Inventory for list of individual oversized items stored in those folders).

Processing Information

The original North Carolina Council of Defense records were received by the North Carolina Historical Commission (present-day State Archives of North Carolina) in multiple accessions from 1918 to 1932. The collection was apparently loosely arranged by creator, with the original organization of the records left intact. During the 1920s, the Historical Commission worked on arranging the World War I Papers in groups of common themes or creators. In 1964, Maurice S. Toler and John R. Woodard of the North Carolina Department of Archives and History prepared a finding aid for the "World War I Papers, 1903-1933," which consisted of thirteen series of records. This was the first known formal organization of the World War I, and a basic finding aid completed to the box and item level was finalized on June 30, 1964. From 1964 until 2014, as more World War I materials were received by the State Archives of North Carolina, the items were added to a new box at the end of each appropriate series.

The Council of Defense records by 1964 had been subdivided into eight basic divisions, which were not numbered. The divisions are as follows: General Correspondence, 1917-1921, no date; Papers of Col. Joseph Hyde Pratt; Subject Files; History of the North Carolina Council of Defense; County Councils; Council of National Defense; Other States' Councils of Defense; and Soldiers' Record Cards. The original order and provenance of the World War I materials received by the State Archives from 1918 to 1932 was somewhat lost over time.

The reprocessing of the collection, completed in June 2015, attempts to rejoin portions of the Council of Defense records, and to more logically organize the collection into numbered series and subseries to match the original acquisition records for the collection. For example, photographs of the Council of Defense and North Carolina county Councils of Defense members were stored in Series XII: Photographs and Postcards (which was created by 1964 artificially as a series). These photographs were moved to WWI 1 North Carolina Council of Defense Records, and organized in Series I (see the North Carolina Historical Commission's 1918-1920 Biennial Report for justification for this reorganization).

Paperclips and rusted metal fasteners were removed from the items in the collection. Original materials were removed from bindings which were turning acidic, causing damage to the materials. Newspaper clippings and newspaper articles which were retained were photocopied as preservation copies, to protect other archival materials in a given folder from being further discolored by the acidity in the newspaper clippings. Newspaper citations were retained on the preservation copy if such information was pre-existing on the original newspaper clippings. Badly torn or faded documents were photocopied as preservation copies, to save the informational content of the records for collection users.

Oversized items such as posters and large certificates—originally folded and stored in regular file folders in the collection—have been relocated to Oversized Boxes 31-32, and Oversized Folders 1-3 (stored in the Military Collection Oversized Map Case). Each oversized item is described based on which original folder and series/subseries the item was located in prior to reprocessing of the collection.

The collection has been processed to folder-level, meaning that items within each folder are not typically arranged in any particular order or described individually (unless otherwise required based on the uniqueness of the materials). Where possible, the original collection's folder titles were retained. When added description was required to assist researchers to locate unique items in the collection, folder titles were supplemented with more detailed description in parentheses after the original folder title.

Historical Note

In an attempt to garner a united national support for the United States' involvement with the World War I effort, and believing in the imperativeness of uniting and expediting all measures for the coordination of a prolonged war effort, the U.S. Congress created the Council of National Defense with the passage of the Army Appropriation Act (39 Stat. 649) (also called the National Defense Act of 1916) on August 29, 1916. The Council of National Defense was a presidential advisory board that included six members of the President's Cabinet: Secretary of War Newton D. Baker (chairman of the Council); Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels; Secretary of Agriculture David Houston; Secretary of the Interior Franklin Lane; Secretary of Commerce William Redfield; and Secretary of Labor William Wilson.

The Council was assisted by an Advisory Committee nominated by the Council and appointed by the President of the United States. The Advisory Committee was composed of seven members, each with some special knowledge of some industry, public utility, the development of natural resources, or other special qualifications useful to the war mobilization effort. The Advisory Committee members were: Daniel Willard, President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor; Howard E. Coffin, Vice-President of Hudson Motor Company; Julius Rosenwald, President of Sears, Roebuck and Company; Bernard M. Baruch; Franklin Martin; and Dr. Hollis Godfrey, President of Drexel Institute.

The Council's responsibilities included "coordinating resources and industries for national defense" and "stimulating civilian morale." As President Woodrow Wilson said of the Council: "The Council of National Defense has been created because Congress has realized that the country is best prepared for war when thoroughly prepared for peace. From an economic point of view, there is very little difference between the machinery required for economic efficiency and that required for military purposes. The Council is organized for the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.”

The work of the Council grew more significant when the United States entered World War I in 1917. The federal government held a conference on May 2, 1917, in Washington, D.C., to facilitate the organization of state councils of defense, to which Joseph Hyde Pratt, state geologist, was appointed to represent North Carolina. The federal government used the conference to ask state governors to create their own local councils of defense to support the national war effort, with the goal being to cooperate with other state councils and the federal government in organizing and directing the resources of states, making them available and effective for national use. The state councils would also recommend changes in state laws to state legislatures, with the goal of the changes aimed at increasing the nation’s ability to respond to the needs of the war effort.

At the start of America’s entrance into the war, the Council coordinated resources and industries for national defense; stimulated civilian morale; coordinated the work of state and local defense councils and women’s committees; and later studied problems of post-war readjustment of soldiers to civilian life and reconstruction of the nation’s infrastructure. The Council of National Defense ceased its operations in June 1921.

After reading Joseph Hyde Pratt’s report of the May 1917 national conference, North Carolina Governor Thomas W. Bickett appointed an Executive Committee to lead a state Council of Defense, and called for an organizational meeting in Raleigh on May 31, 1917, with the intention of forming the North Carolina Council of Defense. The committee members of the new state Council consisted of J. Bryan Grimes, D. H. Hill, George Howe, W. S. Lee, R. N. Page, Joseph Hyde Pratt, Mrs. James Eugene Reilley, F. E. Seeley, James Sprunt, C. C. Taylor, and George W. Watts. At the initial meeting, Hill was appointed Chairman of the North Carolina Council of Defense; B. R. Lacy, North Carolina’s State Treasurer, was named treasurer; and W. S. Wilson—a state legislative reference librarian—was selected as secretary of the state council. The Executive Committee organized sixteen state-level committees and identified potential chairmen for county councils in all one hundred counties of North Carolina.

For the entire duration in which the United States was involved militarily in the war, the North Carolina General Assembly was not in session. Therefore, the state’s Council of Defense was unable to receive governmental appropriations and had to rely upon private donations to function. None of the council members—either at the state or local level—received any financial compensation for their services to state during World War I.

The North Carolina Council of Defense acted as a clearinghouse for information received from the Council of National Defense. One of the first statewide initiatives was the organization of a speakers’ bureau to inform the populace of the causes of the war and the reasons for American involvement. Other speakers urged soldiers to take advantage of the offer of government insurance or intervened with deserters, urging them to return to the ranks to avoid prosecution. The state Council investigated the loyalty of applicants for positions in government agencies or service organizations, and encouraged college students to volunteer for community work efforts. After the erection of training camps in the state, the state Council formed a War Camp

Community Service division to provide entertainment, recreational opportunities, and moral guidance for the trainees. In the fall of 1918, the state Council reviewed applications for building permits which sought exceptions to the nationwide prohibition of non-essential construction activity.

However, the bulk of the real work of the North Carolina Council of Defense was performed at the local level. Each county chairman was to appoint six members to his council, to organize committees that mirrored the state blueprint, and to create township and community councils. A Soldiers' Business Aid Committee was erected in each county to help soldiers deal with legal matters, such as the writing of wills. Local committeemen provided encouragement and assistance to soldiers' families, and interviewed individuals of doubtful loyalty to caution them against seditious activities. They also compiled reports concerning property owned by alien residents in their county.

The county boards helped to organize the various fund-raising drives, including Liberty Loans, thrift stamps, the Fosdick Fund, and American Red Cross campaigns. They assisted local draft exemption boards to compile lists of draft-age men, and organized the reserve militia or home guard in their county. Some of the more prescient county chairmen took an active role in the preservation of their council's records, which they donated after the war to the North Carolina Historical Commission's on-going World War historic materials collection project, per Sections 3 and 4 of Chapter 144 of the North Carolina Public Laws and Resolutions in 1919.

Series I is the largest series, and is composed of the original operational records and correspondence of the North Carolina Council of Defense and administrators. It is composed of six subseries, all based and titled on the original records groups donated in the 1910s and 1920s as part of the North Carolina Historical Commission's war records collection project.

This history contains Pratt's original research on the Council's operations, based entirely on his own experiences, his own records, and the original records of the Council of Defense (housed after the war at the North Carolina Historical Commission).

Series I: North Carolina Council of Defense

Subseries ID: Subject Files

Subseries 1D, Subject Files, are the original topical correspondence and materials maintained by the North Carolina Council of Defense during the war. The subseries contains the correspondence of Council Chairman Daniel Harvey Hill Jr. and Council Secretary W. S. Wilson; publications made by the Council for promoting support of the war effort throughout North Carolina; and records and letters deposited with the North Carolina Historical Commission after the war by the chairmen of several county Councils of Defense. This series is arranged alphabetically by topic or subject matter. The Subject Files cover a variety of matters and themes common to the period of World War I, such as the American Red Cross's operations in the state; espionage suspicions and trails of alien residents suspected of being spies in North Carolina; various war-time committee records and correspondence; Liberty Loan drives and War Savings Stamps campaigns; the organization and administration of the North Carolina Council of Defense; Soldiers' Business Aid Committee materials; and the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA) operations in North Carolina. Subjects covered feature the state's efforts to recycle materials for the war effort, such as scrap drives and household food management.

Subseries 1D also contains unique records of North Carolina citizens' reactions to the war and the war support effort. Information on the operation of North Carolina's draft boards and draft exemptions process document different counties' enlistment procedures during World War I (see Box 9, Folders 15-16). Box 9, Folders 9-14 contain information on North Carolinians who deserted from the U.S. military, and the attempts of officials to locate where these individuals had gone (including information on relatives that might be hiding the men out in the state). Box 11, Folder 14, features a typed record entitled "Prosecutions Under Selective Service and Espionage Acts. Eastern District of North Carolina, July 1, 1917-July 1, 1918," which contains the trial results for individuals in eastern North Carolina suspected of failure to register for the military draft or suspected of espionage for an enemy nation. Other interesting items include the role of women in war-time activities, such as related to the push for a Prohibition law to be enacted. Box 14, Folder 6—Prohibition Laws (Wilson County Petition) contains an original, signed petition from citizens of Wilson County, North Carolina, to a state representative urging the passage of Prohibition legislation during World War I.

Subseries IE: North Carolina Council of Defense Photographs

Subseries 1E, North Carolina Council of Defense Photographs, contains portraits of chairmen of county Councils of Defense, and portraits of some of the members of the state Council of Defense. These photographs were not taken at the time of the war; rather, they are photographs that were donated by members of these councils by request of the North Carolina Council of Defense chairman. Included with the photographs are letters to and from county and state Council members, seeking photographs for inclusion in the historical records of the Council. The photographs are organized alphabetically by the county from which the individual served, with each person identified on the back of the photograph.

Subseries IF: Joseph Hyde Pratt Papers

Subseries 1F is the Joseph Hyde Pratt Papers. Pratt was a member of the Board of the North Carolina Council of Defense (until called to active military service), and he served as the state representative to the National Defense Conference in Washington, D.C., May 2-3, 1917, for Governor Thomas W. Bickett. In 1929, Pratt began arranging his papers from his time as a member of the state Council, to use for the preparation of a history of the North Carolina Council of Defense's wartime activities. Pratt completed this history in 1932, but the work was never published (see Subseries IA, Box 1). This includes documents collected from 1917 to 1920 by Pratt, as well as the correspondence and research materials he gathered from 1921 to 1933 relating to the Council of Defense. The correspondence is arranged by date, with miscellaneous materials located at the end of the subseries.

Series II: North Carolina County Councils of Defense (arranged alphabetically by North Carolina County's name)

Series II, North Carolina County Councils of Defense, contains correspondence about the organization of the county Councils of Defense; form letters sent to and by the county Councils; and correspondence of the chairmen for most of North Carolina's county Councils. Most of these materials were sent to the North Carolina Historical Commission by the counties following World War I. The series also contains miscellaneous documents related to various war-time programs, projects, and commemorations within each county. The series is arranged alphabetically by county, with most of the materials dating between 1917 and 1921. For many North Carolina counties, these are the only existing records of the operation of county Councils of Defense (apart from newspaper articles).

Series IV: Oversized Materials

Series IV consists of oversized items, such as posters and large certificates, originally folded and stored in regular file folders within the collection. The oversized items have been arranged by size within the corresponding size of archival storage boxes and acid-free folders. Each oversized item is described based on which original folder and series/subseries the item was located in prior to reprocessing of the collection. In brackets following the folder or item title is written the original box and folder for other locations within the collection WWI 1, from which the oversized items were formerly stored. Oversized Boxes 31 and 32 are stored on the archival storage shelves with the rest of WWI 1's collection boxes. The remaining oversized folders are now stored in the Military Collection Oversized Map Case.
