North Carolina County War Records (WWI 2)
[World War I]

Collection Number: WWI 2

Title: North Carolina County War Records

Dates: 1917-1922, 1927 (bulk 1917-1919)

Creator: North Carolina Council of Defense; North Carolina Historical Commission; Fred A. Olds; and various others.

Abstract

North Carolina County War Records is composed of correspondence, poems, songs and song books, sheet music, newspaper clippings, photographs, booklets and pamphlets, scrapbooks, small posters, compiled histories, reports, official draft records and draft reports, soldiers' casualty records, and miscellaneous records documenting the counties and citizens of North Carolina during World War I, collected by the North Carolina Historical Commission as part of their war records collection project.

The collection documents the efforts of 81 North Carolina counties to support the United States and counties' troops in its effort to fight World War I. Materials in the collection document aspects of county leaders in various war-related activities, local citizens' activities, soldiers in training camps and overseas, county and community-led war bond and savings stamps drives, public parades for soldiers, and other local activities on the home front during the war. Records from some North Carolina county and city American Red Cross chapters are included in this collection.

Acquisition

This collection was acquired in multiple parts by the North Carolina Historical Commission (subsequently the State Archives of North Carolina) from 1918 to 1960, though most of the collection was received between 1918 and 1932. Individuals who worked voluntarily as county war records collectors during World War I gathered these materials from various county individuals and sources, and mailed or delivered the materials to the Historical Commission as donations to the state's war records collection project. North Carolina's War Records Collector Robert B. House received these materials from the county, and entered the donations in the Historical Commission's accessions registers.

All of the materials in this collection were acquired or collected as part of the North Carolina Historical Commission's on-going World War historic materials collection project, which was authorized by Sections 3 and 4 of Chapter 144 of the North Carolina Public Laws and Resolutions in 1919.

Processing Information

The original North Carolina County War Records collection materials were received by the North Carolina Historical Commission (present-day State Archives of North Carolina) in multiple accessions from 1918 to 1960, though most of the collection was received between 1918 and 1932. The collection was apparently loosely arranged by the records' creators, with the original organization of the records left intact. During the 1920s, the Historical Commission worked on arranging the World War I Papers in groups of common themes or creators. In 1964, Maurice S. Toler and John R. Woodard of the North Carolina Department of Archives and History prepared a finding aid for the “World War I Papers, 1903-1933,” which consisted of thirteen series of records. This was the first known formal organization of the World War I materials, and a basic finding aid for these papers completed to the box and item level was finalized on June 30, 1964. Most of the county materials had been organized originally under the county name from which the materials were received, though frequently there was not consistency in how materials were organized within folders for the county records by the Historical Commission.

This collection was reprocessed in 2015 to better reflect the original intent of the records’ creators or county war records collectors. Added detailed description was provided at the item level for photographs, oversized materials, published and unpublished materials, and soldiers’ letters. Items were re-folded depending on the items’ condition and preservation needs. Oversized items such as posters, large photographs, and oversized documents—originally folded and stored in regular file folders in the collection—have been relocated to Oversized Box 1, and Oversized Scrapbooks 1-3.

Paperclips and rusted metal fasteners (where possible) were removed from the items in the collection. Original materials were removed from bindings that were turning acidic, causing damage to the materials. Newspaper clippings and newspaper articles which were retained were photocopied as preservation copies, to protect other archival materials in a given folder from being further discolored by the acidity in the newspaper clippings. Newspaper citations were retained on the preservation copy if such information was pre-existing on the original newspaper clippings. A number of badly torn or faded documents were photocopied as preservation copies, to save the informational content of the records for collection users.

The collection has been reprocessed to the folder level, meaning that items within each folder are not typically arranged in any particular order or described individually (unless otherwise required based on the uniqueness of the materials). This is not true for photographs, which have been arranged in a specific order, either chronological, alphabetical, or based on an original numbering scheme written on the back of the photographs. Materials frequently were removed from being stored as groups in folders together, and smaller groups of materials were organized in multiple folders from those original larger folders. This was the case with soldiers’ letters, which are stored now in folders titled with the individual soldier’s name represented by the letters—unlike before, where letters from multiple individual were stored in a single folder. Where possible, the original collection’s folder titles were retained. Added description was required for some folder titles to assist researchers in locating unique items in the collection, which under the older folder-labeling system were difficult to locate.

Arrangement

The collection is arranged in two series: Series I County War Records and Series II Oversized Materials. Series I is arranged in alphabetical order by North Carolina county name, with each county's records arranged under the county's name depending on the types of materials and subject content of the items. County leaders, Council of Defense chairman, and county administrators' papers are typically arranged first within a given county. Newspaper articles and publications are arranged towards the end of the materials within a given county. Series II is arranged at the end of the collection, and organized by size of the materials or type of items. The Oversized Scrapbooks 1-3 are stored flat on the shelves, due to their size and weight.

Series I: County War Records

Series II: Oversized Materials

Historical Note

The North Carolina Historical Commission (the precursor of the State Archives of North Carolina) recognized at the beginning of the United States' involvement in World War I the importance for North Carolina to begin an effort of collecting materials which documented the role taken by North Carolina soldiers and civilians in the war. In cooperation with the North Carolina Council of Defense, a special history committee, called the "Historical Preservation" committee, was appointed by the Council of Defense. The Historical Preservation committee consisted of the North Carolina Historical Commission Secretary Robert Digges Wimberly (or R. D. W.) Connor, as chairman; Haywood Parker of Asheville, North Carolina; Ms. Adelaide Fries of Winston-Salem, North Carolina; Paul W. Schenck of Greensboro, North Carolina; Edgecombe County-native George Gordon Battle, who was one of the leading lawyers in New York City at the outbreak of WWI; Ms. Lida T. Rodman; and J. G. deR. Hamilton of Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

The Council of Defense Historical Preservation committee's mission was to collect for permanent preservation the war records of the state of North Carolina. The term "war records" was given the widest possible interpretation, so as to include all materials that illustrate the state of mind of the citizens of North Carolina toward World War I; the effect of the war on social, educational, economic, agricultural, political and religious conditions; and the personal achievements, sacrifices, and services of North Carolina individuals in the war. Efforts were made by the North Carolina Historical Commission to secure the cooperation of such organizations as the State and County Councils of Defense; the State and County Fuel Administrations; the State and County Food Administrations; the American Red Cross; and other organizations engaged in work connected with the World War I preparedness and support efforts of the United States.

The Historical Preservation committee and the North Carolina Historical Commission urged these institutions, organizations, and members of the public to preserve carefully their records, and ultimately deposit them with the North Carolina Historical Commission. Efforts were also made to secure assistance in this work through the appointment in each county of a county historian for war purposes. However, these efforts were not particularly successful, as resources and people were stressed throughout the war at the local level in North Carolina. Individuals willing to work as volunteer war record collectors were secured in sixty counties during the war. These individuals promised to aid in the historical preservation work of the committee, but only a few of them had been active throughout World War I.

Not much could be accomplished in terms of collecting war materials, however, due to a lack of funding and the lack of a law by the North Carolina State Legislature indicating a state-backed collection program. From 1917 to 1919, the State Legislature was not in session, and this scenario could not be remedied. However, in 1919 the State Legislature formally approved the North Carolina Historical Commission's war records collection efforts with the passage of Chapter 144 of the North Carolina Public Laws and Resolutions (specifically Sections 3 and 4) in 1919. The new law empowered the Historical Commission to appoint a collector of World War records, and provided money for the project's support.

Acting under authority of this law, the Historical Commission chose Robert B. House Collector of World War Records, and House entered upon his work June 19, 1919. On taking up his duties, House found that the Historical Preservation committee of the State Council of Defense (through a system of volunteer collecting in various counties of the state), and Col. Fred A. Olds (North Carolina Historical Commission Hall of History Collector) had already collected a large amount of war materials. House tried to systemize the collection process and network of volunteer collectors around North Carolina. House and a part-time stenographer worked to copy information from original materials; label, classify, and identify original materials; and operate a continuous correspondence network with individuals throughout the state and with federal war-time government offices.

One of House's first tasks was to survey all possible sources of information concerning North Carolina in the World War to be found in the National Archives; in departments of the North Carolina government; and among the various county organizations and individuals of North Carolina. Having found other states in America were performing the same records collection work during the war, in September, 1919, representatives from several states met in Washington, D.C., to organize what became the National Association of State War History Organizations. This was a cooperative enterprise financed by a membership fee of $200, paid by each member state organization. The North Carolina Historical Commission became a member of this association. This organization assisted North Carolina and House in standardizing war records collection policies and procedures.

In North Carolina's government departments, House found that the correspondence and published documents from the years 1917 to 1920 would be essential for documenting the state's role in World War I; but, those documents still held an administrative value in their respective government offices during the war and could not be released to the North Carolina Historical Commission for preservation. House strongly advocated with the heads of each office the necessity of preserving their records for the war years, until such time as they could be released to the Historical Commission. The records produced by county organizations and individuals in North Carolina were found to be in a chaotic state. In many cases, officials of various war-work organizations in the state had destroyed their records immediately upon the signing of the armistice ending World War I, under the impression that these records were of no further value. In many cases, they had kept no complete records during the course of the war.

World War Records Collector House made attempts to gain assistance in the war records collection work through the appointment in each county of a county historian (or county war records collector) for war purposes, but these efforts were not particularly successful. Due to the loss of individuals in North Carolina counties for service outside of the state, the taxing nature of the war on county resources, rationing of fuel and limited transportation options for some counties, and time required for the records collection, House found it difficult to locate responsible, educated people in every North Carolina county willing and able to carry this work out for the whole duration of World War I. People were secured in sixty North Carolina counties who promised to aid in the records collection work, but only a few of them were active and gathered significant numbers of historic war-related records. Ultimately, records from eighty-one counties were collected by the Historic Commission in this collection.

The following individuals were the most active county war records collectors, which explains why in WWI 2 there are more materials for some counties than others: Mrs. John Huske Anderson (Cumberland County); J. R. McCrary (Davidson County); A. P. Godwin (Gates County); W. C. Jackson (Guilford County); Daisy Crump Whitehead (Halifax County); John A. Currie (Hoke County); Florence Swindell (Hyde County); H. Gait Braxton (Lenoir County); Catherine Albertson (Pasquotank County); Isabel Graves (Surry County); W. Brodie Jones (Warren County); F. H. Hendren (Wilkes County); and J. Dempsey Bullock (Wilson County).

Most of the county war collectors sent the materials they collected during their World War I from 1919 to 1923 to the North Carolina Historical Commission. Many of the county collectors, acting on instructions from the Historical Commission, waited that long to send in the records in order to write compiled histories of their county's operations and history during the war (see Box 11, Folders 31-32).

Scope and Content

The North Carolina County War Records collection is composed of correspondence, poems, songs and song books, sheet music, newspaper clippings, photographs, booklets and pamphlets, scrapbooks, small posters, compiled histories, reports, official draft records and draft reports, soldiers' casualty records copied from various sources, and miscellaneous records. The collection documents the efforts of North Carolina's counties to support the United States in its effort to fight World War I. The collection is arranged in two series: Series I County War Records and Series II Oversized Materials.

Materials in the collection document aspects of county leaders in various war-related activities, including rationing, construction limitation reviews, war bond and savings stamps drives, public parades for soldiers, and other local activities on the home front during the war. Records from some North Carolina county and city American Red Cross chapters are included in this collection.

The collection also contains a significant number of photographs, letters, compiled service histories, and biographical sketches of selected soldiers who fought in World War I from various North Carolina counties. School children in Halifax County, for example, wrote biographical sketches of local service individuals in the U.S. military (see Box 8, Folder 19, through Box 9, Folder 1 for these sketches). The United Daughters of the Confederacy in Surry County sent to families and soldiers returned from serving in World War I a printed form, called a "War Record," which included significant amounts of information about the soldiers' service (see Box 11, Folders 9-13).

Ministers and pastors, families, and others in various counties collected original soldiers' letters sent from the front lines back home, telling of North Carolinians' experiences in World War I. County war record collectors sent these letters to the North Carolina Historical Commission for preservation shortly after the war, such as those soldiers' letter from Cumberland County (see Box 2, Folders 8-44).

The collection documents efforts to support the troops and provide troop training in North Carolina. Photographs of the United States Laundry Operation in Raleigh, which served three military camps in South Carolina and North Carolina, detail the operations necessary to ensure American service individuals had clean and repaired uniforms and clothing (see Box 11, Folder 27). Additionally, there are some items showing German POW camps in North Carolina, such as the German internment camp in the community of Hot Springs in Madison County, North Carolina (see Box 9, Folder 20).

County historians for some North Carolina counties used the records they or the county war records collector gathered to write histories of the county's operations during World War I to support the war effort. Some county historians wrote histories of local military installations or war bond drives, such as the Cumberland County "History of War Camp Community Service at Fayetteville, N.C. [Fort Bragg], November 1, 1919" (see Box 2, Folder 47). Per the instructions of the North Carolina Historical Commission, county historians sometimes compiled these histories, then discarded of the original records used to create the history, or returned the materials to their original owners. In some cases, these compiled histories are the only detailed sources (apart from newspaper articles) about various World War I activities in North Carolina counties.

Series II contains oversized materials not fitting in regular-sized archival folders and boxes. The materials include oversized photographic prints of the 2nd North Carolina National Guard marching in a farewell parade in downtown Goldsboro, North Carolina, in August 1917, for the soldiers of the guard unit, who had just been ordered to ship over to Europe during World War I (see Box 13, Folder 4).

Materials not located in WWI 2 were organized by the North Carolina Historical Commission after World War I in the collections North Carolina Council of Defense Records (WWI 1) and North Carolina Draft Records (WWI 3).

Series II: Oversized Materials

Series II consists of oversized items, such as posters, oversized photographs, and large scrapbooks, originally stored in regular file folders and on the shelf (in the case of the large scrapbooks) within the collection. The oversized items have been arranged by size within the corresponding size of archival storage boxes and acid-free folders. The three Wilson County oversized scrapbooks are not stored in any archival enclosure, due to their size.
