Biographical and Historical Note

Adolphus Wesley Carpenter (1909-1997) was an American amateur photographer in Durham, North Carolina. Carpenter graduated from Duke University's business school in 1931. He and his family often took trips to various places across North Carolina and the southeast. Many of the photographs in the collection document the people and activities on these trips.

Carpenter was a career executive with Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company in Durham, NC. He devoted much of his spare time to nurturing his love for photography, including the processing and printing of photographs in a darkroom located in the basement of his home in Durham, North Carolina. Largely inspired by his older brother, Jesse T. Carpenter, the two brothers learned from each other and shared many trips devoted to photography. Jesse was responsible for encouraging Carpenter to enter his photographs into photography contests sponsored by local newspapers, of which he won several awards.

Collection Overview

This collection contains five hundred and fifty three (553), gelatin silver photographs. The photographs in the collection range in size from 2.5"x3.5" to 10.5"x13". The bulk of the collection consists of double sided photographs measuring 5.25"x6.75". These double sided photographs consist of two traditional gelatin silver prints that have been glued together. Most of the double sided photographs have three holes punched for installation in a binder. It is believed the reasoning for gluing two photographs together was to create a thicker document along with a more book-like feel. The photographs, taken and printed by Mr. Carpenter, depict families, events, objects, and scenes one would typically see in 1940's American life. Places include Nags Head, North Carolina; Durham, North Carolina; Pocahontas, West Virginia and various unidentified locations across North Carolina and the southeast. Events and activities seen in the photographs include the Chesterfield Christmas Parade, various fishing trips, portraits of family, friends and the surrounding community; and artistic landscapes. Also included in the collection is a selection of photographs depicting African American life. These include portraits of community members, especially children, and the various activities and work the residents engaged in on a daily basis.

Collection Arrangement

The Wesley Carpenter Collection is loosely arranged by subject matter. Separation of the double-sided photographs was not possible; therefore, many of the photographs in particular groupings may belong to other groups. Be that as it may, it is important to note that certain subjects were prioritized to unique groups regardless of what subject matter appeared on the reverse. For example, pages (pairs of photographs) depicting the Chesterfield Christmas Parade or African-Americans were placed in those respective groups regardless of what appeared on the reverse. It can be said that all pages that contain photographs depicting African-Americans or the Chesterfield Christmas Parade appear successively while photographs in other groups, such as portraits or landscapes could appear in any group if the subject matter on the reverse was thought to be a higher priority in terms of organizing the subject matter.
